Ms. Kathleen McGettigan
Acting Director
Office of Personnel Management
Washington, D.C. 20503

Dear Acting Director McGettigan:

We are conducting oversight of the Office of Personnel Management’s (OPM) decision to use ethics waivers to pave the way for increased union influence over government policy. These waivers allow former union officials to conduct official government business with their former employer, creating the likelihood of conflict of interests and political cronyism. Given the recent revelations that unions influenced the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s (CDC) guidance on whether to reopen schools, we are particularly concerned about OPM’s use of waivers for labor officials.1

On March 25, 2021, OPM announced the appointment of Alethea Predeoux to be Director of the Office of Congressional, Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs at OPM.2 Ms. Predeoux was previously the Director of Legislative, Political and Grassroots Mobilization at the American Federation of Government Employees (AFGE).3 AFGE lobbies for and represents hundreds of thousands of federal government employees providing “comprehensive services for members including legislative …and political…assistance.”4 According to Ms. Predeoux’s official biography, while at AFGE, she “worked to advance the union’s legislative agenda” much of which would take place in front of the agency she now represents.5 Because of the ethics waiver, Ms. Predeoux will be able to communicate with her former employer, allowing her to immediately enact and advocate for policy that would directly benefit AFGE. This is the classic definition of a conflict of interest.

5 About Us, supra note 3.
Pursuant to Executive Order 13989, all appointees of the Biden Administration are required to sign an ethics pledge, including limiting interaction with their former employers. This is in place to avoid conflicts of interest and the government becoming beholden to interest groups, such as political unions. While some claim President Biden’s ethics pledge is allegedly the most stringent ever, unions are receiving special treatment. By appointing former union officials to positions that directly interact with their former employers, unions stand to directly benefit from Biden Administration policies. This is alarming considering the devastating effect teachers unions have had on the educational prospects of so many of our nation’s children.

The White House has stated these waivers were “in the public interest.” Ironically, within a month of President Biden taking office, the American Federation of Teachers—a political union—was able to successfully influence scientists at the CDC to amend official guidance with the goal of keeping children out of the classroom. The revised guidance was contrary to science and contrary to the public interest. It is unclear the extent other unions have infiltrated the highest ranks of the Administration.

In the prior Congress, Democrats launched an investigation into the White House’s use of ethics waivers. The recent reporting necessitates a similar review of the Biden Administration’s waivers. No political union should hold the levers of government power, but all indications are that President Biden caves to the unions to the detriment of our children.

To better understand how these waivers were granted and the scope of these appointees’ interactions with their former employers, we request the following documents and information as soon as possible but no later than June 29, 2021 for the time period, January 20, 2021 to the present:

1. All documents and communications regarding the granting of waivers for appointees within the Office of Personnel Management under Executive Order 13989.
2. All waivers, recusals, or divestitures related to Executive Order 13989 for appointees within the Office of Personnel Management.
3. All documents and communications between Alethea Predeoux, Director, Congressional, Legislative & Intergovernmental Affairs, Office of Personnel Management, and her former employer, the American Federal of Government Employees.
